

Stylish Space to Work From Home

“These are no ordinary times, an unprecedented number of people are now working from home and it’s about adapting our homes to create a comfortable and productive working space,”

Saffron Hare, Creative Director

Our homes have never been more important but probably one of the biggest changes is that so many now have to work from home. Finding somewhere to work that’s quiet and doesn’t interrupt family life too much is tricky, especially if space is limited.

There's a lot to deal with and trying to make things as normal as possible is vital. If there's a space you can make your own while the world changes around us, it can be smart too.

One of the best places, where it's probably a little calmer, is close to a window. Being able to look out on to a garden, terrace or a balcony, is a great place to head for even if the new 'office' is now the end of the kitchen table. Foliage and flowers will help keep the spirits up.
